

I am not in favor of allowing the CBA to disallow themselves from the no call ruling simply because they have an "established" business relationship with me. They use that as an excuse but I can tell you, I know no one at the bank I do business with so even if they called me I would not welcome the call. Also, by weakening the law, others may also find themselves "allowable" and the process of answering unwanted calls will simply start all over again. The way I see it, if I have enough pain that I need the services of these organizations, I will call them. For now, tell them to leave me and my family alone so we can have family time after work.

Dan Coffin,

Fort Wayne, IN